The purpose of this course is to introduce students to important texts and issues of eighteenth-century philosophy. We will take as our theme the influence on philosophy of Newton's Mathematical Principles of Natural Philosophy.

The importance for seventeenth- and eighteenth-century philosophy of recent developments in science are reflected in, for example, Locke's Epistle to the Reader in his Essay Concerning Human Understanding, where he describes "the incomparable Mr. Newton" as one of the "master builders" of the commonwealth of learning, and satisfies himself with the task of an "underlabourer in clearing ground a little, and removing some of the rubbish, that lies in the way to knowledge". Hume describes his Treatise of Human Nature as "an attempt to introduce the experimental method of reasoning into moral subjects". Locke and Hume here reflect two aspects of the influence on philosophy, one concerning the role and content of philosophy, the other concerning its method. These are just two of the underlying themes of this course.

The course will begin with a brief consideration of Newton, with an emphasis on the method of experimental philosophy; we will read selections from his Mathematical Principles of Natural Philosophy. We will then consider a number of philosophical issues arising out of the Principles—ranging from questions about the nature of space to the issue of free will and God's intervention in the universe—as they are discussed in the Leibniz-Clarke correspondence and selections from Berkeley's De Motu. We will then consider the philosophical underpinnings of Berkeley's critique as they are put forward in his Principles of Human Knowledge. Finally, we will consider Hume's application of the "experimental method of reasoning" to a new "science of human nature" in his Treatise of Human Nature.

Texts: The Leibniz-Clarke Correspondence, Berkeley's Principles of Human Knowledge and Hume's Treatise of Human Nature are available at The Word bookstore on Milton Street. The other readings will be made available online.

Requirements: The requirements for the course are

- (i) two short papers (1000 words, 2500 words), the first worth 15% of the final mark and the second worth 15% of the final mark.
